A Colorado Civic Assembly in the News

In a notable first for the United States, Fort Collins, Colorado voters approved recommendations developed by a Civic Assembly during their November general election. The assembly, composed of twenty residents selected by civic lottery, spent two weekends deliberating on the future of a 164-acre property that had been the subject of years of debate. Their multi-use plan appeared on the ballot and received 67% support, defeating a competing initiative. This outcome highlights growing interest in innovative public decision-making processes that aim to reduce polarization and build consensus. See details at the City of Fort Collins website, or discussion in The Colorado Sun. Similarly, Deschutes County formed a Deschutes Civic Assembly on Youth Homelessness last fall.

Fall 2025 Central Oregon Intergovernmental Council Housing Update

The Central Oregon Intergovernmental Council (COIC) has released its Fall 2025 Housing Update, highlighting progress on the region's houselessness response. Strong cross-jurisdictional partnerships have driven notable achievements, including expanded shelter capacity and surpassing all targets set by the Governor's Emergency Orders. Despite these successes, significant funding uncertainties remain.
