Milken Institute Names Bend–Redmond a Top-Performing U.S. Metro

Katy Brooks, Economic Development Officer, and Cyrus Mooney, Business Development Manager, recently met with the author of The Milken Institute's 2025 Best Performing Cities Report. Councilors are invited to read the full meeting notes.

The report ranks the Bend–Redmond metro area 4th nationally, highlighting strong economic momentum driven by labor market conditions, high-tech growth, and access to economic opportunity. The ranking evaluates 13 indicators, including employment and wage growth, industry concentration, and regional competitiveness.

Key strengths include a strong labor market supported by expanding education and health services. Recreation and healthcare remain the region's largest employers, supporting baseline employment stability. Financial services are growing quickly and contribute to a more diversified and stable economic base. Bend's expanding professional and business services sector further strengthens performance in the report's high-tech and knowledge-based employment category, helping balance an otherwise cyclical economic base.

The report also identifies economic diversification, broadband subscription access, and housing supply as critical factors for sustained regional performance, and discusses potential future impacts from artificial intelligence and automation.
